In Thane, India, left, Usha Bhagwani and her sons do not have enough money to pay for basic needs like food, shoes, schooling and kerosene to boil water. To save money, they often drink water that has not been boiled, and Mrs. Bhagwani has lost two other children as a result. In Phnom Penh, Cambodia, right, toilets are clustered along the Mekong River. Billions of people in the third world do not have access to toilets or even pit latrines.

man's waste by food or water or poor hygiene into the mouth of a neighbor. Some of those ailments are fatal, while others weaken people and entire nations.

The Carrier

Illnesses Delivered By Filthy Water

The burden of poor water and sanitation was evident in the frown on Sok Kheng's face as she sat in a hammock on the porch of her wooden hut beside a meandering dirt trail in the southwestern part of Cambodia. Mrs. Sok Kheng, a 36-year-old farm wife with a round face and hair tied back in a pony tail, was supporting her 3-year-old son, Thouch, who is physically and mentally retarded.

"He still can't walk, and he can't even sit on his own," Mrs. Sok Kheng said. "He isn't talking at all, either."

Thouch will probably not recover. In November his mother took him to a doctor, who said the boy was severely malnourished, apparently because of worms or chronic diarrhea.

The culprit is probably the drinking water, which Mrs. Sok Kheng gets from a pond 50 feet from her house. The villagers bathe in the pond, and cattle use it as well. Moreover, since there is no toilet the water is probably contaminated with human waste.

The doctor recommended giving Thouch cow's milk to supplement his diet, and so the family scrounged to buy a can of milk — at $1 pesos a can, more than twice what the boy's father earns for a day's work. A neighbor felt sorry for the child and gave them a few cans as well.

But the family has no concept of hygiene, and so the milk might do more harm than good. Because the milk is so precious, Mrs. Sok Kheng makes each can last as long as a month, even though she has no refrigerator to keep it cool in tropical temperatures.

"We put just a little bit of milk in a bottle and then add a lot of warm water," Mrs. Sok Kheng said. "One can lasts us five days."

Soon it was time to feed Thouch, and Mrs. Sok Kheng's eldest child, a 14-year-old boy, poured a lot of milk and a lot of pond water into an unsterilized bottle. With their unwashed hands, Mrs. Sok Kheng and each of her three older children felt the bottle and the nipple to see if the temperature was right. Then they handed it to Thouch.

Mrs. Sok Kheng is in many ways representative of those living in the third world. Some 2.9 billion people — 60 percent of the population in the third world — have no access to a toilet, not even a decent pit latrine. The vast majority simply use a bush or a quiet piece of ground, and for them toilet paper is an unimaginable luxury. Most rely on leaves or a splash of water, and afterward few have the means and training to wash their hands thoroughly with soap and water.

Even if Mrs. Sok Kheng were to take her children to the district hospital, conditions would be no better. In middafternoon, the Phnom Srough District Hospital a couple of dozen miles away was nearly deserted — except for a few pigs rooting around the yard.

"There's normally a doctor here only in the mornings, from 7 A.M. to 11 A.M.," said Lee Lina, a young pharmacist who was rummaging through supplies. He said the hospital had no electricity, no running water, no food and almost no medicine.

There is an outhouse, but it is so decrepit and overgrown that patients and doctors just use the bushes nearby.

"We don't have a place to wash hands," Mr. Lee Lina said dolefully.

Does the local doctor wash his hands?

"Well," Mr. Lee Lina began awkwardly, and then he paused in embarrassment. "Well, it's hard to tell."

In some respects, sanitation in poor countries has worsened in the last few years. World Health Organization statistics show that in the first half of the 1990's the proportion of people in the third world with access to a toilet actually fell, from 36 percent to 34 percent.

But over all, sanitation conditions and water supplies have improved noticeably in the last few decades, and child death rates have fallen sharply. Packets of oral rehydration salts, popularized by Unicef and now widely available in rural areas of the third world, save the lives of countless children with diarrhea; improved water and the rehydration packets may together save the lives of more than a million children a year.

In particular, most countries are registering great progress in supplying potable water. In the first half of the 1990's, the proportion of people in the third world with access to safe drinking water rose from 61 percent to 73 percent.

"When you look at the last century, the greatest advance was not antibiotics," said Dr. Graham Ogle, an Australian with long experience as a physician in Papua New Guinea. "It was sanitation and the provision of clean water."

Dr. Ogle, who has just started running a hospital in Phnom Penh, the Cambodian capital, noted that dirty water causes diarrheal illnesses like gastroenteritis that are not normally life-threatening but that cumulatively wear a patient out.

"It's a vicious cycle," he said. "If you've got a kid who's a little bit malnourished, then he gets gastroenteritis, and he's more malnourished, and his immunity drops. Then he can get pneumonia or tuberculosis, and while you or I might shrug it off, here a kid can die of it."

Children are also weakened by worms, a common result of poor sanitation. Up to 60 percent of humanity has some kind of worms crawling in their bellies or under their skin. Sometimes those grow so numerous that they entirely block the intestines and cause death, but mostly they are simply painful, distracting and debilitating.

"You eat only so much food, and worms get some of that," Dr. Ogle said. "You get a bellyache, so you don't feel like going to school or going to work. And worms give you anemia, so you feel lethargic and are less likely to develop your skills and grow. And in young children, anemia affects cognitive development, and that's permanent. It can shift down the learning ability of your entire population."

The Conditions

Sanitation's Bane: Huge Urban Slums

The biggest slum in the world may be Dharavi, a vast shantytown in Bombay, where hundreds of thousands of people live in hovels connected by tiny meandering alleys. Sewage runs in the paths along with the rats.

"We give the kids sandals, but they don't wear them," grumbled Jaya Pardesi, a 25-year-old mother in Dharavi. Her three small children were running around barefoot on a dirt pathway that they and all the other children also use as a toilet, and her 3-year-old daughter was sucking her filthy finger.

These urban slums present a sanitation nightmare. The challenge is increasing, because urbanization is a trend everywhere in the third world, from Brazil to Zambia. Villagers trek to cities and set up shacks on any bit of deserted ground, in places where there is no water and no toilet.

On the Bassac River just outside Phnom Penh is one of the most wretched slums in the world, a putrid slope of mud and excrement that is home to tens of thousands of people packed in rickety shacks on the bank of the river.

There are latrines of a sort, for entrepreneurs have set up little platforms over the water. These are open toilets where men and women squat behind half-barrels, a determined nonchalance substituting for privacy, as the toilet owners make money by raising fish on the sewage in fenced-off waters below the toilet platform.

The fish may not sound appetizing, but the worst problem is that the slow river is used by the slum not only as its toilet, but also as its source of drinking water.

Preung Sry, a round-faced 27-year-old mother of three, uses buckets of river water for washing vegetables, for bathing her children and for drinking. She says she normally boils the water before drinking it, but her 6-year-old son died a few years ago after a bad case of diarrhea and her three other children also regularly get diarrhea.

Mrs. Preung Sry says she went to school for a total of six months, and she is too lethargic — or anemic — to put any emphasis on hygiene. Soap is not such a problem, for it is relatively inexpensive, the greater challenge is a recognition of the importance of hand-washing, and clean water to go with the soap. In Mrs. Preung Sry's case, the only water available for washing hands is the black liquid taken from between the toilets in the river.

"I sometimes wash my hands before making food, and my kids sometimes wash their hands before eating and sometimes don't," she said. "My husband and I use the toilet over the river, and the kids just go down below the house. My kids are lazy — they don't wash their hands afterward."

The Strategies

Approaches Aimed At Cleaner Living

However grim conditions sometimes seem to be today, the progress of the last few decades is striking. The record in a variety of countries is also important because it suggests that while there is no single magic bullet available, there are a myriad of approaches that help control sanitation-related diseases.

Many development economists now emphasize the importance of operating back-like institutions that offer credit to poor people in third-world cities and villages, so they can start small businesses and generate some cash. The idea is that with a bit of money, people will be able to help themselves by building covered wells, buying mosquito nets and visiting doctors when necessary.

Likewise, there is no doubt that one way for governments to save lives is to supply water to poor areas — not just clean water, but lots of it, even if it means charging for water to pay for the service. One of the most persistent reasons for poor hygiene is simply that there is almost no water to wash with in many parts of Africa, India and China. Hand-washing after defecation can seem like a luxury when the water must be lugged from a creek two hours away.

India has cut diarrhea-related deaths by providing many villages with covered wells, often with chlorinated water. Bolivia managed to cut diarrhea among children by showing poor people how to disinfect water and then keep it at home in narrow-necked jugs with corks.

While they have done poorly over all in improving the lives of their people, Communist governments in some countries have done very well in promoting community health projects that emphasize sanitation, water supply, immunization and basic health care. Cuba has achieved a life expectancy — an average of 76 years — that is about the same as that of the United States. And in Shanghai, China's largest city, there are no India-style slums and a newborn baby can also expect to live 76 years, two years longer than a baby born in New York City.

China achieved its progress in part through coercive steps, like barring peasant families from moving to the cities and forcing peasants to work on community health projects. But Cuba and China, along with many capitalist countries, have also achieved public-health gains by promoting basic education.

"Everything runs into everything else," said John Chalmer, who has spent most of the last two decades in Africa and is now the Tanzania representative for Plan International, the child sponsorship organization known in America as Childreach. "Sanitation runs into health. And health runs into income levels."

"But I would argue that education is perhaps the most important," Mr. Chalmer continued. "If you educate a girl in basic literacy and health, then when she becomes a mother, she is going to be able to better care for her children."

Education is important in part because sending girls to school is one of the best ways of reducing the number of children they will have — and improving the health of the children that they do have. Beyond that, people with schooling tend to understand better the dangers that they cannot see, like germs, and consequently tend to allocate their limited savings in a different way.

Saidi Simba, a congenial 34-year-old Tanzanian farmer who never went to a day of school, underscores how uneducated parents inadvertently cost the lives of those they love the most. Mr. Simba, a lean man with an oval face, faint mustache and warm smile, has had 26 children by his two wives. Six of the children have died.

Mr. Simba lives on a winding dirt street in a shantytown in Dar es Salaam, the Tanzanian capital. The shanties are built on marshy ground, so sewage often floods or leaches into the wells, and most families know enough to use well water only for washing.

Not Mr. Simba. Teen-age boys sell drinking water on the streets for 20 cents for a huge jug, but he refuses to spend most of his earnings on water when it is available free from a well. He could boil the water, but then he would have to pay large sums for kerosene or firewood.

While Mr. Simba is poor, at bottom it is a question of priorities and education. Mr. Simba did once spend $5 on a watch, and a few dollars more on an old ring. When his children do get sick, he is willing to spend what to him is a fortune to save them. But, again because of his lack of education, the money is wasted.

The most recent child in the family to fall seriously ill was Tatu, Mr. Simba's 15-month-old daughter, who in September began to come down with severe diarrhea and fever. Mr. Simba took her to the local traditional healer and without question handed over the huge sum of $10, along with a chicken, and $6 worth of cloth used for the magic.

The healer put Tatu under the bed and had her mother squat on top of it and urinate, drenching the child. Then the healer burned elephant dung and had the child breathe the fumes.

"Usually it helps," Mr. Simba said dejectedly. But not this time, for Tatu died. Mr. Simba aches at the loss of a sixth child, yet he continues to offer his family the same water.

"We don't like to drink water from the wells," Mr. Simba said soberly. "But if we don't have any other water, we'll drink it."

Death by Water

A huge range of diseases and parasites infect people because of contaminated water and food, and poor personal and domestic hygiene. Millions die, most of them children. Here are some of the deadliest water-related disorders.

DISORDER	ESTIMATED DEATHS PER YEAR
DIARRHEA	3,100,000	Diarrhea is itself not a disease but is a symptom of an underlying problem, usually the result of ingesting contaminated food or water. In children, diarrhea can cause severe, and potentially fatal, dehydration.
SCHISTOSOMIASIS	200,000	A parasitic disease caused by any of three species of flukes called schistosomes and acquired from bathing in infested lakes and rivers. The infestation causes bleeding, ulceration, and fibrosis (scar tissue formation) in the bladder, intestinal walls and liver.
TRYPANOSOMIASIS	130,000	A disease caused by protozoan (single-celled) parasites known as trypanosomes. In Africa, trypanosomes are spread by the tsetse fly and cause sleeping sickness. After infection, the parasite multiplies and spreads to the bloodstream, lymph nodes, heart and, eventually, the brain.
INTESTINAL HELMINTH INFECTIONS	100,000	An infestation by any species of parasitic worm. Worms are acquired by eating contaminated meat, by contact with soil or water containing worm larvae or from soil contaminated by infected feces.

Groups That Help Those Who Fall Ill

Readers have asked how to help victims of malaria, diarrhea and other illnesses common in areas with poor sanitation and hygiene. Many organizations are active in combating these problems, including these:

Africare, 440 R Street N.W., Washington, D.C. 20001.

CARE, 151 Ellis Street, Atlanta, Ga. 30303.

Childreach, 155 Plan Way, Warwick, R.I. 02886.

Interaction (an umbrella organization for about 150 groups working around the world), 1717 Massachusetts Avenue N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036.

International Rescue Committee, 122 East 42d Street, New York, N.Y. 10017.

Save the Children, 54 Wilton Road, Westport, Conn. 06880.

Precautions for Those Who Travel in Risky Areas

By BETSY WADE

Travel in the tropics involves many hazards not found in the temperate zones, and they cannot always be avoided.

The best way to fight malaria is to avoid being bitten by a mosquito in an area where malaria is transmitted, especially at night, when these varieties are active. Staying covered up is a wise precaution. Repellants containing Deet at a concentration of 30 to 35 percent are recommended by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, as well as spraying of sleeping quarters with flying-insect spray.

In rooms that are not well screened or air-conditioned, use of a bed net is recommended, preferably one sprayed with permethrin, an insecticide usually sold under the brand name Permanone. Clothes can also be soaked in this liquid.

In addition, travelers planning to go to malaria areas should visit a travel-health clinic or tropical-medicine specialist well in advance to get guidance and a prescription on what antimalarial drugs to take. The decision is based on the patient, because a traveler may be taking medicines that are incompatible with certain drugs, and on the areas to be visited.

The issue of what is prescribed is a subject of debate because some malaria strains have become resistant to chloroquin, and some doctors have questioned the safety of certain drugs.

In its book "Health Information for International Travel," the Centers for Disease Control cautions that despite all efforts, a traveler may get malaria and should be aware of the symptoms so as to seek help promptly. All malaria deaths are avoidable, the Government agency says, if the disease is treated in time.

If a traveler fears diarrhea and does not wish to drink the water in the place visited, the water should not be used to brush the teeth and a traveler should keep the mouth closed in the shower. Ice should not be used in drinks. Boiling drinking water vigorously for a minute will take care of most problems; a pinch of salt will restore some taste.

The C.D.C. maintains a telephone line with advice on malaria and water. It provides information through a recording or on a fax transmission. The number is (404) 332-4559. The book "Health Information for International Travel" is for sale for $14 from the Superintendent of Documents in Washington, D.C. 20402.

Carte Figurative des pertes successives en hommes de l'Armée Française dans la campagne de Russie 1812–1813.

Dressée par M. Minard, Inspecteur Général des Ponts et Chaussées en retraite.

Paris, le 20 Novembre 1869.

Les nombres d'hommes présents sont représentés par les largeurs des zônes colorées à raison d'un millimètre pour dix mille hommes; ils sont de plus écrits en travers des zônes. Le rouge désigne les hommes qui entrent en Russie, le noir ceux qui en sortent. —— Les renseignements qui ont servi à dresser la carte ont été puisés dans les ouvrages de M.M. Thiers, de Ségur, de Fezensac, de Chambray et le journal inédit de Jacob, pharmacien de l'Armée depuis le 28 Octobre.

Pour mieux faire juger à l'œil la diminution de l'armée, j'ai supposé que les corps du Prince Jérôme et du Maréchal Davoust qui avaient été détachés sur Minsk et Mohilow et ont rejoint vers Orscha et Witebsk, avaient toujours marché avec l'armée.

GET TO KNOW YOUR STREET VENDORS

WAYS TO A BETTER VENDOR WORLD

In New York, street vending has always attracted ambitious, hard-working men and women with limited economic options. Successive waves of immigrants — Jewish and Italian in a previous era, now Chinese, Bangladeshi, Afghan, and Senegalese — have used vending to gain a foothold in their new country. Its low start-up costs, independence, and flexibility make vending a traditional first step for small business entrepreneurs.

But vending isn't an easy way to get ahead. Throughout New York City's history, merchants mindful of "unfair" competition have joined forces with city officials concerned with congestion, modernization, and "quality of life" to bar vendors from streets and regulate them excessively. These complex and shifting laws force vendors back and forth across the border between the formal and informal economies, making it difficult for vendors to serve the public and make a decent and honest living.

Here are four basic ways the City can make vending laws work better for vendors, their customers, and everyone else.

1. LIFT THE CAPS

It's virtually impossible to get a vending license in New York City because of strict caps, or limits, placed on the number of vendors in the 1970s and '80s. The estimated wait for a general vending license is several decades. By setting the caps far below vendor supply and public demand, the City unintentionally creates a thriving and exploitative black market for permits and licenses. Legal vendors have to buy licenses from illegal middlemen at exorbitant prices. Other vendors are driven underground, where they're unlicensed and unregulated. To bring vendors into the legal mainstream, the City should raise the caps to realistic levels and crack down on the black market in licenses and permits.

2. INCREASE STREET ACCESS

Vendors need foot traffic to survive, but waves of street restrictions have forced them farther away from the areas of the city that can support them. Pressure from merchant associations in the 1970s and Business Improvement Districts (BIDs) in later decades led to widespread restrictions, and Mayor Rudolph Giuliani made street restrictions a centerpiece of his "quality of life" campaign. Even on open streets, complex rules make it difficult to vend legally. The City should reduce street closings according to set criteria and rescind restrictions not founded in legitimate concerns about safety and street congestion. It should also simplify time-of-day restrictions to make them easier for vendors to understand and follow.

3. REDUCE THE FINES

In 2005, Mayor Michael Bloomberg quadrupled the maximum fines for street vendor violations from $262 to $1,000. A few tickets for parking a cart more than 18 inches from the curb or less than 20 feet from a store entrance can wipe out months of earnings. Other businesses pay less for more serious violations while having a greater ability to pay. Vendors are entry-level small business owners who earned absurd fines as a cost of business. The City should reduce fines to pre-2005 amounts — a level that deters violations but doesn't put vendors out of business.

4. REFORM ADMINISTRATION AND ENFORCEMENT

Vending regulation is a patchwork of policies from the last hundred years that vendors and police find hard to understand. The rulebook is a series of photocopied and unformatted excerpts from the city code — rough going, even for native English speakers. As a consequence, vendors who want to follow the rules get tickets for violations they don't understand, and police who want to enforce the rules give tickets for violations that don't exist. To increase compliance, the City should simplify vendor regulation and create a new rulebook that clearly explains the rules in English and a few of the many language vendors speak.

kWh/year (kilowatt-hours per year) is a measure of energy (electricity) use. Your utility company uses it to compute your bill. Only standard size clothes washers are used in this scale.

Clothes washers using more energy cost more to operate. This model's estimated yearly operating cost is:

when used with an electric water heater

$11
when used with a natural gas water heater

Based on eight loads of clothes a week and a 2000 U.S. Government national average cost of 8.03¢ per kWh for electricity and 68.80¢ per therm for natural gas. Your actual operating cost will vary depending on your local utility rates and your use of the product.

MAP | DANGEROUS INTERSECTIONS | KNOWN ISSUES | FEEDBACK

Welcome to CrashStat 2.0!

When Transportation Alternatives launched Crashstat.org in 2004, it immediately became an indispensable resource for advocates, neighborhood groups and healthcare professionals in their fights for safer streets. For the first time, all New Yorkers had a way to see pedestrian and cyclist crashes in every neighborhood, enabling them to back up their first-hand experience of dangerous streets with comprehensive hard data. Crashstat.org is still the go-to source for street safety information.

Crashstat 2.0 is an updated and improved version of that ground breaking site. Journalists, planners, politicians and New Yorkers from every walk of life will once again have access to NYC's most up to date street safety resource.

NOTES FOR A PEOPLE's ATLAS of

CHICAGO

NOTES

EVERYTHING WE KNOW (AND MORE) ABOUT CHICAGO

by Jerome Grandfa
Veronica Schuber

Brooklyn FALAFEL

(theater of change)

What is it?
"Notes for a Peoples Atlas" is a a Chicago mapping and design project. "Notes" invites participants to fill in the blank outline of Chicago with individual and collective local knowledge, forgotten histories, ongoing debates, and changing definitions of urban space.
For archived maps and more info see:
chicagoatlas.areaprojects.com

Why maps?
Because power exists in space, struggle exists in space and we exist in space.
Because we cannot know where we are going if we do not know where we are from.

NOTES FOR A PEOPLE's ATLAS of

CHICAGO

My Map of How I joined The Chicago Outfit Roller Derby...

(5) I teach at an all-boys high school, & one of my students came up with my name: The Joan Ranger! (Thanks, Bo!) #14

Me as a kid

I grew up here in Portage Park (1) across from a public school (O. A. Thorpe) that had a great schoolyard for roller skating!

Lakeview: (3) Party at Miss Hair Salon – Derby girls know how to have fun!

January 2008: Whirlaway Bar in Logan Square (2) Mexican Jumping Mean was putting up a poster for a derby fund raiser party & said I should join the team.

Now I skate all over the (6) city & tell strangers about roller derby! (Chicago ♥s Roller Derby)

Summit (4) I was 20 minutes late for my first practice, but everyone was cool & nice ... I was happy about that because getting lost is frustrating!

Beverly: 93-year-old

NOTES

The map is about Hospitals and Clinics in my area. I also have parks railroads in there too. I just don't have people hospitals I also have animal Hospitals. I learned while doing this map I learned that there is more animal hospitals than People Hospitals in my area.

ELECTION RESULTS BY TIMES BUILDING FLASH

Steady Light Westward—Roosevelt; Eastward—Parker.

VISIBLE FOR THIRTY MILES

State and Congress Elections Also to be Shown from Lofty Tower—Bulletins in Times Square and Harlem.

From the top of the tower of its new building in Times Square THE TIMES on Tuesday night will announce by searchlight signals the result of the Presidential election, the contest in New York State for Governor, and the political complexion of the new House of Representatives. On account of the great height of the Times Building, the signal station being over 412 feet above tidewater, the signals will be readily distinguishable anywhere within a radius of thirty miles from Times Square.

The searchlight will throw a shaft of white light, and the results will be indicated as follows by the direction:

TIMES BUILDING FLASHLIGHT ELECTION BULLETIN CODE.

NOVEMBER 6, 1904

SEARCHLIGHT WILL FLASH THE NEWS OF STATE AND CITY CONTESTS.

Tammany carries New York County—Steady flash to North.

Fusionists carry New York County—Steady flash to South.

Democrats carry Kings County—Steady flash to West.

Fusionists carry Kings County—Steady flash to East.

Democrats carry Queens County—Flash North, swinging East and West.

Fusionists carry Queens County—Flash South, swinging East and West.

Democratic majority in the Assembly—Flash West, swinging North and South.

Republican majority in the Assembly—Flash East, swinging North and South.

Wide Areas With Severe Damage

An analysis of satellite imagery taken the day after the earthquake reveals the widespread devastation it caused. The analysts caution that their assessment is preliminary and that the destruction will probably be found to be much worse once a ground survey is conducted.

The Geology and Geography

On Jan. 12, destruction and death on an enormous scale unfolded across the densely populated valley of the Haitian capital, Port-au-Prince, and into the shantytowns and villas of the surrounding hills.

Tectonic plates

Port-au-Prince sits near the border of two tectonic plates. As the plates pushed alongside each other, the strike-slip fault built up strain over hundreds of years and released it all in the recent quake.

A CLOSER LOOK

Death by Water

A huge range of diseases and parasites infect people because of contaminated water and food, and poor personal and domestic hygiene. Millions die, most of them children. Here are some of the deadliest water-related disorders.

DISORDER/ ESTIMATED DEATHS PER YEAR
DIARRHEA 3,100,000	Diarrhea is itself not a disease but is a symptom of an underlying problem, usually the result of ingesting contaminated food or water. In children, diarrhea can cause severe, and potentially fatal, dehydration.
SCHISTOSOMIASIS 200,000	A parasitic disease caused by any of three species of flukes called schistosomes and acquired from bathing in infested lakes and rivers. The infestation causes bleeding, ulceration, and fibrosis (scar tissue formation) in the bladder, intestinal walls and liver.
TRYPANOSOMIASIS 130,000	A disease caused by protozoan (single-celled) parasites known as trypanosomes. In Africa, trypanosomes are spread by the tsetse fly and cause sleeping sickness. After infection, the parasite multiplies and spreads to the bloodstream, lymph nodes, heart and, eventually, the brain.
INTESTINAL HELMINTH INFECTION 100,000	An infestation by any species of parasitic worm. Worms are acquired by eating contaminated meat, by contact with soil or water containing worm larvae or from soil contaminated by infected feces.
